

1 - What do you usually call this item?

Most players usually refer to the item by two main names: Novo Futuro and Syringe. Some others also use the term Needle to refer to it.

2 - Do you like the current name (Novo Futuro)? Why or why not?

Overall, players expressed appreciation for the name Novo Futuro, highlighting that it has been established in the game for years, which creates familiarity and habit. Many stated that even if it were changed, they would continue to call it by the current name due to the connection already formed.

The name was considered appropriate and creative, as it clearly conveys the idea of giving the player a new chance at life within the match, representing progress, innovation, and continuity. For some, it resonates with the emotion of each game, feeling complete and memorable by symbolizing a fresh start and the possibility of achieving Booyah.

Still, some comments pointed out that, being composed of two words, the term may feel a bit long in fast-paced communication, leading part of the community to adopt shorter nicknames, such as Syringe. Nevertheless, even with this observation, the perception that Novo Futuro is a simple, straightforward name that fits well within the Free Fire atmosphere prevailed.

3 - Would you prefer one of the suggested names (Hadrenalina or Levantaê)?

Most players showed a preference for the current name over the suggested options, noting that neither Adrenaline nor Get Up conveys the item's purpose with the same strength.

The term Adrenaline was considered interesting by some, as it evokes energy, action, and even injections used in emergency situations, aligning with the idea of quickly saving lives. However, for others, the name feels generic and common, widely used in action games in an unoriginal way, which could diminish Free Fire's unique identity.

On the other hand, the name Get Up was seen as even less suitable. Many noted that it sounds more like a command or motivational phrase than an item name, making expressions like "got Get Up?" feel awkward. Furthermore, it was considered too simple, lacking the impact or sense of a fresh start that Novo Futuro conveys.

Overall, players emphasized that although Adrenaline is somewhat more acceptable than Get Up, both names were regarded as inferior to the current one, which is already well-established and carries a stronger meaning of evolution, new beginnings, and continuity within the game.

4 - Do you have another idea for a better name?

Although many players are already accustomed to the current name, some alternative suggestions have emerged. Among them, the term Renascimento (Rebirth) stood out for directly conveying the idea of overcoming, continuity, and a fresh start. In addition to being impactful, it is a short word, easy to remember, and facilitates quick communication during matches.

Other suggestions included Healing Injection or Healing Syringe, names that clearly relate to the item's appearance and function, reinforcing its practical identity. The option Vital Boost was also proposed, conveying immediate energy and rapid recovery, aligning well with the revival mechanic.

Furthermore, some players noted that the community has already popularized the nickname Syringe, suggesting that a combination like Syringe: Novo Futuro could be interesting, preserving the tradition of the official name while incorporating the term most commonly used by players in daily conversation.